SEED WHEAT—SMUT.—The neighboring farmers are now making enquiry in our market for seed wheat. A bright but not a bleached grain, indicates that the wheat has not been heated in the bulk—a fault which is more to be dreaded than any other, because it impairs, if it does not destroy the vigor of the grain. Of course, every farmer will prefer seed clear of cheat and such like impurities, but as these are easily got rid of—as we shall presently show—their presence is by no means an insuperable objection. Cheat is another pest which can only be separated from the seed by means of a good sieve, though the small grains of wheat will be carried off with it. But of all the nuisances which wheat is infested with, the worst, and as it is found this year in most of the crops that have been brought to market—sometimes in considerable quantity—the farmer will be under the necessity of adopting means to destroy its ill effects. Every one knows that smut generates smut, but it only requires a little pains to render it wholly inoperative. The simplest means, and perhaps as effectual as any, is to make a brine strong enough to steep an egg, in which the wheat should be steeped for two or three hours. Then take it out, let it drain in the barn floor for a few minutes, and roll it in slacked lime sufficient to give every grain a good coating. The caustic property of the lime destroys the vitality of the smut. Another good effect of the brine is to cause the seeds of most foreign weeds, such as cheat and spelt, to float on the surface, whence they may be carefully skimmed. Many farmers have, no doubt, treated their seed wheat in this manner, for there is nothing new about it. But a simple caution is necessary to those who have not. Both the steeping and the lime add to the bulk of the wheat, and in sowing, the seed is apt to be spread too tight a head. This may be guarded against either by the seedsmen shortening his step, or peaking of a larger quantity in his hand. Four quarts of wheat treated in the way recommended, will measure out about five pecks when ready to be taken to the field.—Petersburg Express.

DR. COLENSO, LATE BISHOP OF NATAL.—Doctor Colenso gained his notoriety by his denial of the authenticity of the Pentateuch, which he pronounced to be no better than a collection of romances, and it was for this and other heretical opinions that his spiritual superior deposed him from his office. Dr. Colenso, however, did not choose to vacate his episcopacy, and like the unhappy Crawley, of fiction, but with less reason, flatly declined to obey the command of competent authority, to do so.

Upon this issue, Colenso and Twells went as it were to war. The new Bishop demanded possession of the Cathedral, which was at once taken possession of, barricaded, and held by the partisans of the old.

This strange siege lasted three days, and the garrison only capitulated when the massive doors of the House of God were forced by the officers of the law!

With the reduction of the Cathedral by the attacking party, the famous Dr. Colenso, whose name was once so universal a topic of conversation, disappears from the ecclesiastical world, and we trust that in some happier future he may be able to discern the error of his way, and amend his philosophy.—Norfolk Virg.

PARLIAMENTARY CHANGES.—Parliamentary changes were numerous in Great Britain during the time of the commencement of the present Parliament and the close of the late session of that body. A London paper announces that thirty-five peers have died, some of them full of years, as Glenelg at 83, and Montagu at 76; others in the very dawn of their manhood, like poor Lord Brownlow, who was but 24 when he fell a victim to consumption at Mentone; and Lord Harrington, who had only just attained his majority. The Commons, however, have been more fortunate in this respect, only two vacancies having been caused by death. Nor, with the grand exception of Lord Palmerston himself, were any of them men of much mark amongst the number. No less than fourteen vacancies were occasioned in the Commons, through the conversion of honorable gentlemen into noble lords, by the two processes of "succession" and "creation." The London papers referred to, however, think that the most startling of all the changes "are those by which ten members have been raised to the judicial bench. Only three of them, Cairns, Kelley and Whitehead, had achieved a Parliamentary reputation.—Rich. Whig.

A HORSE FINDS HIS WAY HOME.—A Kentucky Triple, of Flemingsburg, Kentucky, sold a horse to a man who was buying horses for the Government, early in the war. The same horse was taken to Cincinnati and sold to an officer in the U. S. army, and since that time nothing was heard of him until a few days ago, when he returned of his own accord to the farm of Mr. Triple, who had raised him from a colt. The horse was four years old when he left, and now returns aged eight years, having been on quite a tour since he left his home. This is a remarkable illustration of the wonderful instinct possessed by the horse. It shows that the horse is possessed of a strange instinct, and years do not wipe out his memory.
